Phil pointed out something today. There are water wells to east, they just are outside the quarter mile. Therefore it might be appropriate to add to the sentence below to account for those wells.

Ground water elevation data provided do not indicate found that ground water does not flows from the mining area towards existing water wells within 1/4 mile of the exemption boundary.

Good job pulling in all the comments.

Suggest you delete "provided" from each of these sentences:

tests Ground water elevation data provided do not indicate found that ground water does not flows from the mining area towards existing water wells.

EPA's review of the Goliad aquifer exemption is based on the law and additional technical information provided to ensure current drinking water sources will not be adversely impacted.
